

Video Walls

Walls are working much harder these days with the addition of multi-screen video presentations. Of course, video walls have been around for a long time, mostly used at tradeshow and exhibits. But lately, more and more companies are looking to Blue Marble to capture the power of video walls in corporate headquarter lobbies, customer sales centers, employee training facilities and more.

Executive Floors

When visitors meet with C-level executives at the headquarters of this large regional bank, they're greeted with our five-screen interactive experience that offers viewers a variety of information and presentations. When not in active use, the wall becomes a quietly cycling work of art depicting the many faces of community.

Sales Centers

In most new real estate construction projects, sales need to get underway even before there's a building or unit available to walk through. This video wall lives in the sales center for an expansion of The Bellevue Collection, a luxury market multi-use development near Seattle, Washington. Working with The Voyager Group agency, we created an immersive eight-screen experience illustrating the caliber of shopping, dining, entertainment, office and residential environments soon to be available.

Exhibits

Atlanta's High Museum celebrated 100 years of Modern Art with an exhibit of landmark works of art and our six-screen video wall that tied 100 years of world events with art work from each decade.
